This study aims to determine the representation of beauty privilege in the film 200 Pounds Beauty (2023) and the good and bad impacts of beauty privilege in the film. This study uses a descriptive qualitative research type with Roland Barthes' semiotic analysis model. The author chose a film clip as the object of research. The meaning of representation is obtained through three levels of analysis, namely denotation, connotation and myth in the film clip 200 Pounds Beauty. The representation that indicates women have privilege is an attractive physical appearance according to applicable beauty standards, especially in Indonesia, such as a slim and tall body, white skin, long and straight hair. Without realizing it, beauty privilege can have good and bad impacts on community life.
