Abstract

This study aims to analyze the effect of lecturers' technical competence on the performance of private universities with work discipline as a moderating variable in the Special Region of Yogyakarta. The population in this study consisted of lecturers from private universities in the Special Region of Yogyakarta, totalling 7,753 private university lecturers. The sample included 96 respondents currently serving or previously serving in structural positions, selected through purposive and snowball sampling techniques. Data collection was conducted using a questionnaire, and the analysis was performed using the Structural Equation Model-Partial Least Square (SEM-PLS) with the SmartPLS 4.0 application. This analysis was carried out in two stages: first, the outer model test to assess validity and reliability, followed by the inner model test to evaluate the relationships between variables. The analysis results indicate that technical competence and work discipline have a positive and significant effect on the performance of private universities in the Special Region of Yogyakarta. Additionally, work discipline can strengthen or moderate the impact of technical competence on the performance of these institutions.
